

Older voters have identified Medicare as one of their top issues in the November elections, yet too many politicians fail to recognize the contributions Medicare makes to the economy and the health security of millions of Americans. Any candidates who fail to talk about how they would strengthen Medicare for future generations do so at their peril.

Fact Sheet: Hawaii

JULY 2018

Medicare Contributes $2.4 Billion to Hawaii's Economy

Medicare helped pay the health care costs of 230,659 Medicare beneficiaries in Hawaii in 2017, allowing its seniors to get the care they need and protecting them from serious financial burdens.

In addition, Medicare is a critical part of the economic infrastructure of Hawaii, investing about $2.4 billion in the state in 2017. Thousands of businesses, large and small, including hospitals, nursing homes, physicians' offices and medical device providers, rely on Medicare to exist and maintain their operations. Businesses in Hawaii receiving Medicare dollars use them to pay employee salaries, rent, and state and local taxes, as well as buy equipment and make capital improvements to their facilities.

In fact, Medicare spending in Hawaii is equivalent to about 15 percent of spending by state and local governments in Hawaii.

Here's how much Medicare* spent in Hawaii by health care service sector:

Hospitals	$1 billion
Physicians	$720 million
Other health professionals	$86 million
Skilled nursing facilities	$116 million
Home health care agencies	$92 million
