

Older voters have identified Medicare as one of their top issues in the November elections, yet too many politicians fail to recognize the contributions Medicare makes to the economy and the health security of millions of Americans. Any candidates who fail to talk about how they would strengthen Medicare for future generations do so at their peril.

Fact Sheet: North Dakota

Medicare Contributes $1.3 Billion to North Dakota's Economy

Medicare helped pay the health care costs of 116,951 Medicare beneficiaries in North Dakota in 2017, allowing its seniors to get the care they need and protecting them from serious financial burdens.

In addition, Medicare is a critical part of the economic infrastructure of North Dakota, investing about $1.3 billion in the state in 2017. Thousands of businesses, large and small, including hospitals, nursing homes, physicians' offices and medical device providers, rely on Medicare to exist and maintain their operations. Businesses in North Dakota receiving Medicare dollars use them to pay employee salaries, rent, and state and local taxes, as well as buy equipment and make capital improvements to their facilities.

In fact, Medicare spending in North Dakota is equivalent to about 12 percent of spending by state and local governments in North Dakota.

Here's how much Medicare* spent in North Dakota by health care service sector:

Hospitals	$819 million
Physicians	$184 million
Other health professionals	$40 million
Skilled nursing facilities	$34 million
