

Social Security: 2012 Georgia Quick Facts

Georgia's 65+ population is expanding.

In 2010, Georgia's population was about 9,908,000, with 11% being age 65 and older (1,053,000) residents.¹ In 2015, the 65+ population will make up 12% of the state's population, and in 2030, it will be 16%.^{2,3}

Georgia ranks 37th in income level in the U.S.

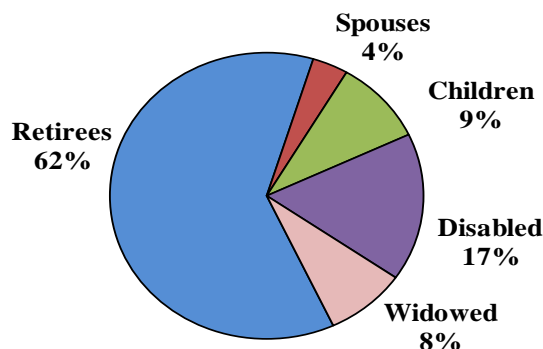

The average personal income in Georgia was $35,490 in 2010. Georgia's per capita income (37th) ranks higher than South Carolina (45th) and Alabama (42nd).⁴

One in seven Georgia residents receives Social Security.

The Social Security program not only provides monthly benefits to retired workers, but also to families when the worker retires, dies, or becomes disabled. In 2010, over 54 million Americans received Social Security benefits; of these, 1,468,209 lived in Georgia.⁵

In 2010, one in seven Georgia residents received Social Security. While 62% of beneficiaries are retirees, 38% are not: 248,887 are people with disabilities; 136,796 are children; 117,633 are widows and widowers; and 51,588 are spouses.⁵

Georgia Social Security Beneficiaries

Social Security pumps nearly 19 billion dollars into Georgia's economy.

In 2010, Georgia residents received 18.7 billion dollars from Social Security.⁶ The average yearly Social Security benefit for a Georgia retiree in 2010 was $13,695—or about $1,141 a month.⁷

Nearly all Georgia residents age 65 or older receive Social Security.

Nationally, over 17% of all people receive Social Security benefits; in Georgia, 15% of residents do. However, older people are more likely to receive the benefit, with 92% of those ages 65 and over receiving it, and 90% of older Georgians receiving it.¹

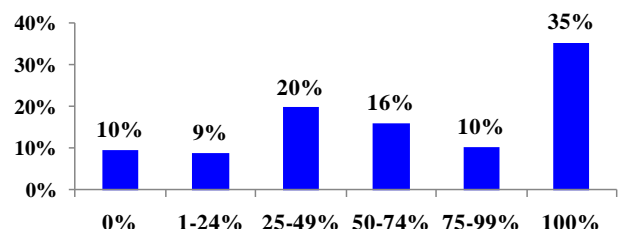

Social Security lifts more than one-third of retirees from poverty.

In 2009, more than one-third (35%) of the nation's older population would be living in poverty if they were not receiving Social Security. In Georgia, 36% of the state's 65+ population would have incomes below the poverty line if they did not receive Social Security.⁸

Social Security is the only source of income for one in three Georgians age 65+.

Social Security makes up 50 percent or more of the income for six in ten Georgians age 65 and older. One in three older Georgians rely on Social Security as their only source of income.⁹
