Kansas's 65+ population is expanding.

In 2010, Kansas's population was about 2.8 million, with 13% being age 65 and older (375,000 residents).¹ In 2015, the 65+ population will make up 15% of the state's population, and in 2030, it will be 20%.^{2,3}

Kansas ranks 21st in income level among the states.

The average personal income in Kansas was $39,737 in 2010. Kansas's per capita income (21st) ranks higher than Texas (23rd), and Oklahoma (33rd).⁴

One in six Kansas residents receives Social Security.

The Social Security program not only provides monthly benefits to retired workers, but also to families when the worker retires, dies, or becomes disabled. In 2010, over 54 million Americans received Social Security benefits; of these, 488,765 lived in Kansas.⁵

In 2010, one in six Kansas residents received Social Security.¹ While 66% of beneficiaries are retirees, 34% are not: 69,044 are people with disabilities; 40,179 are widows and widowers; 19,454 are spouses, and 37,385 are children.⁵

In 2010, Kansas residents received 6.5 billion dollars from Social Security.⁶ The average yearly Social Security benefit for a Kansas retiree in 2010 was $14,242—or about $1,187 a month.⁷

Nearly all Kansas residents age 65 or older receive Social Security.

Over 17% of all people receive Social Security benefits; the same percentage (17%) as in Kansas. However, older people are more likely to receive the benefit, with 92% of those ages 65 and over receiving it nationwide, and 93% of older Kansans receiving it.¹

Social Security lifts more than one-third of retirees from poverty.

In 2009, more than one-third (35%) of the nation's older population would be living in poverty if they were not receiving Social Security. In Kansas, 41% of the state's 65+ population would have incomes below the poverty line if they did not receive Social Security.⁸

Social Security is the only source of income for about one-third of Kansans age 65+.

Social Security makes up 50 percent or more of the income for two in three Kansans age 65 and older. About one-third of older Kansans rely on Social Security as their only source of income.^{9,10}
