

Majority of 50+ Indiana Voters Oppose Chained CPI Say Social Security Debate Should Be Separate from Deficit Discussions

Right now, lawmakers in Washington are considering a proposal to change the way cost of living adjustments are calculated for both current and future Social Security beneficiaries and those receiving veterans' benefits. The change would reduce expected increases each year starting now and reductions would grow over time. The proposal, the so-called "chained" or "superlative CPI", would also affect how the tax code is adjusted for inflation, which would translate into higher taxes for most taxpayers. The proposal is being considered as part of a larger agreement to reduce the deficit. This survey examined Indiana voters' opinions on a proposal to adopt a chained or superlative CPI to reduce the deficit. It also looked at how favorability would be affected towards Members of Congress who voted for such a proposal.

Survey Findings

- Today's seniors should not be affected by changes to Social Security: Eighty-nine percent of voters 50+ in Indiana say it is very important to them that Social Security benefits are not reduced for current seniors (94% Democrat, 85% Republican, 86% Independent).
- No cuts to Social Security to reduce the deficit: Across party lines, a large majority of 50+ Indiana voters (86%) oppose reducing Social Security benefits in order to reduce the deficit (94% Democrat, 79% Republican, 83% Independent). In fact, 78% strongly oppose.
- Indiana voters age 50+ say "no" to the chained CPI: Voters 50+ in Indiana oppose the chained CPI as a way to reduce the budget deficit.
 - More than three-quarters of Indiana voters age 50+ (77%) oppose changing the way the Social Security cost of living adjustment is calculated (84% Democrat, 71% Republican, 74% Independent).
 - More than eight in ten voters age 50+ in Indiana (82%) oppose changing the way the cost of living adjustment is calculated for retired and disabled veterans' benefits (85% Democrat, 80% Republican, 82% Independent).
 - Over half of Indiana voters age 50+ (52%) oppose changing the way the tax code is adjusted for inflation to reduce the deficit (48% Democrat, 58% Republican, 50% Independent). However, 14% said they do not know if they support or oppose this, indicating there is little public understanding of how the chained CPI would affect a person's taxes.
- Indiana voters less favorable to lawmakers supporting chained CPI: Seventy-three percent of Indiana voters age 50+ say they will be less favorable towards their Member of Congress if he or she votes for the chained CPI proposal (80% Democrat, 64% Republican, 73% Independent).
- A large majority say Social Security should be discussed separately. Eighty-seven percent of 50+ voters in Indiana agree that the future of Social Security should be considered separately from budget reduction discussions (93% Democrat, 81% Republican, 86% Independent).

Methodology: Woelfel Research, an independent research firm, conducted 802 interviews of registered Indiana voters age 50+ on March 29 and March 30, 2013. This survey has a margin of sampling error of +/- 3.5%.
