

2012 AARP Survey of New York CD-1 Registered Voters Ages 50+ on Retirement Security

For more than 50 years, AARP has advocated for retirement security for all Americans. AARP in New York commissioned a survey of registered voters ages 50 and older to gauge their opinion on the economy, health, retirement security, and to assess whether they feel they are getting adequate information from candidates on their plans for strengthening vital retirement programs. This telephone survey of New York registered voters ages 50+ was fielded September 7 to September 18, 2012. A total of 399 interviews were completed in New York CD-1 yielding a margin of error of ± 4.9 percent.

Survey-In-Brief

Economy

- The majority of registered voters age 50+ in NY CD-1 rate the overall New York economy as bad (63%), and they are more worried and concerned (55%) about achieving their own economic and financial goals in the next five years than they are hopeful and confident (36%). Most (78%) of these residents say they now expect to rely even more on Social Security and Medicare in retirement due to the poor economy.

Financial Security

- At least half (55%) of respondents say they are often worried about not having financial security in retirement, and most (86%) are not very confident that they will have enough money to live comfortably throughout their retirement years. In fact, less than a third (31%) feels very confident they will be able to retire at some point.

Social Security

- Nearly nine out of ten (87%) retired registered voters surveyed in NY CD-1 are currently collecting Social Security benefits, and most of these individuals say they rely on their Social Security either a great deal (49%) or quite a bit (23%). However, only about one in ten (9%) of all respondents are very confident Social Security will continue to be there for them and for future generations.

Medicare

- Respondents regard the fate of Medicare similarly, with only 12 percent being very confident this benefit will continue to be there for them and future generations, despite nearly all respondents (96%) agreeing that Medicare is critical to maintaining the health of seniors.

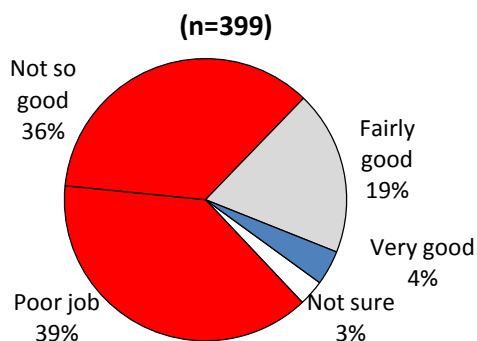

Bi-Partisanship

- More than ninety percent (93%) of respondents agree that finding a long-term solution for Social Security and Medicare is too big a problem for either party to fix, and Republicans and Democrats need to come together, instead to find a solution to strengthen these programs for future generations.

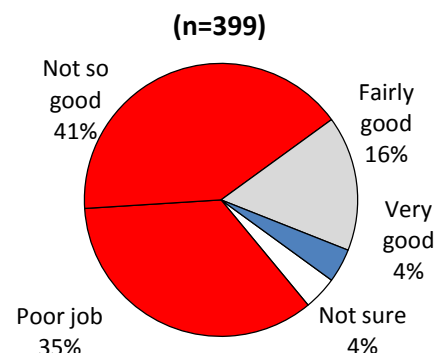

Voter Education

- At least half (52%) of registered voters age 50+ in NY CD-1 say they have had a hard time finding objective and reliable information about the records and positions of candidates running for office this year. Moreover, about three-quarters of the registered voters surveyed in this district say that the candidates for Congress have done a poor or not so good job of explaining their plans for strengthening and reforming Medicare and Social Security.
